Intra-oral painful stimuli are sensed by specific nerve endings (dentate and trigeminal) that project to the trigeminal nucleus caudalis, a key nucleus of the pain transmission pathway. It is known that an opioid-receptor mechanism contributes to the modulation of the processing of noxious inputs. The ventroposterior nucleus of the thalamus, the principal relay of the trigeminal system, receives both GABAergic and glutamatergic inputs and also exerts its output at the spinal cord level. Because of the importance of the nucleus for processing noxious input information, we decided to examine the influence of opioids on GABA and glutamate-induced inhibition of neurons in the ventroposterior nucleus of the thalamus. We recorded the spontaneous activity of single neurons in the ventroposterior nucleus of the thalamus and tested the effects of bath application of the mu-opioid receptor agonist D-Ala(2),N-Me-Phe(4),Gly(5)-ol (DAMGO) on GABA- and glutamate
